NEW ZEALAND OPEN SOURCE AWARDS

What are the New Zealand Open Source Awards

The New Zealand Open Source Awards recognise and celebrate the outstanding work done with free and open source software and the artistic, scientific, and social outcomes it delivers in New Zealand. The awards in 2020 will look at the best of these successes over the last two years.

For New Zealand, free and open source technologies not only represents an opportunity to contribute and be recognised on the world stage, but also to deliver real competitive advantage. Encouraging collaboration, openness, honesty and transparency allows for more effective tools and software to evolve, helping people, communities, and organisations to meet the challenges they face.

The New Zealand Open Source Awards recognise and promote:

- the direct contributions of individuals to free and open source projects, or the promotion of free and open source philosophy.
- exemplary use of free and open source by New Zealand organisations.

Award Process

The NZOSA are split into seven categories, with nominations for the awards made by the open source community, including businesses, government agencies, individuals, community groups and more. A panel of judges, known figures within the open source community, consider all nominations and select the finalists for each category. All finalists are invited to attend the awards gala dinner where the winners are announced.

The judges also select a number of nominations, which become the finalists in the People's Choice category.
